*The High Atlas Foundation (HAF) is a Moroccan-U.S. non-profit organization, founded in 2000 by former Peace Corps Volunteers, committed to promoting sustainable development in Morocco. HAF aims to improve the livelihoods of communities through sustainable agriculture and carbon offsetting, women's and youth empowerment, water infrastructure, experiential skills-building, multi-faith collaboration, and cultural preservation and dialogue. Emphasizing participatory and empowerment approaches, HAF engages local communities in their planning and implementation of projects to achieve their goals, and to develop local leadership and capacities. HAF works to establish partnerships with government agencies, civil associations, cooperatives, and companies in Morocco and internationally to help achieve the project priorities of communities and scaling sustainable development. HAF is headquartered in Marrakech, Morocco, and its programs are currently managed by some 70 on-site and off-site staff and volunteers. To deliver these diverse programs and achieve its mission of sustainable development, HAF has partnered with numerous donors including the National Endowment of Democracy (NED), the Middle East Partnership Initiative (MEPI), the United States Agency of International Development (USAID), the European Union (EU), corporate donors, and foundations.
